		Tots financial loss numbers shared in the press or that indicate how those losses were arrived at. Press excerpts with the referred to financials are below. From The Talon: Losing between $180,000–$250,000 a year, Engeland says that Tiny Tots was siphoning away money that could be used to provide services like public safety and the city’s crossing guard program. From The Town Crier: Engeland made the decision to end Tiny Tots because of the financial impact the program was having on the city. Last year, the city saw direct losses associated with the program between $180,000 to $200,000, with an additional $100,000 spent in overhead costs between facility maintenance and staff hours. “Is there a reason, if we can provide a high-quality program through the private sector, that it would not be an equal substitute for the program that we have today, which would meet the cost needs of all the families while also not be a net loser of $250,000 annually for the Los Altos taxpayer?” Engeland said. Copies Please provide copies of all documents for me.
